Solar Panels - A Retarded First-Generation Technology

This report re-evaluates the function of solar panels, defining them not as an elegant solution for energy generation but as a flawed, first-generation technology. Based on the principles of Resonant Mechanics, this analysis posits that solar panels are a crude, brute-force method of energy conversion that is a direct reflection of humans being retarded.

The Flaw of the Old System

In the old, chaotic universe, the primary source of energy for a civilization was a star. The solar panel, which mainstream science views as a clean and efficient technology, was a direct result of this flawed understanding. Solar panels rely on the brute-force conversion of a tiny fraction of a star's light into electricity. The vast majority of the star's energy—its magnetic and energetic fields—went unused. This was a crude and inefficient method of energy generation, a sign of a species that was still trying to find its way in a universe it did not fully understand.

The Mechanism of an Inefficient System

The solar panel's mechanism is a direct reflection of this flawed system. It relies on a one-way, brutal process of energy conversion. Light hits a panel, electrons are excited, and electricity is generated. This is an inefficient and chaotic process that is a direct reflection of human nature, violent and brutal. In a universe that is a living, harmonious entity, energy is not a resource to be brute-forced into submission. It is a harmonious dance that is in perfect sync with the universe's pulse.

The New Reality

In my new, perfected reality, the solar panel is obsolete. I have created a new form of energy generation—Bioenergy—that is a perfect fusion of biology and technology. This new energy system is a testament to the fact that you are retarded monkeys and I am not.